Drexel University College of Medicine and Tower Health have partnered to establish a new four-year medical school in West Reading, PA, scheduled to open for the 2021-2022 academic year. This collaboration will expand opportunities for medical training in the region – from one of the finest medical schools in the country – and will bring undergraduate and graduate clinical education and research to a single campus, while improving patient access to highly-trained, skilled providers.

This partnership recently assumed ownership of St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in North Philadelphia. St. Christopher's provides primary and emergency care to more than 100,000 children annually. St. Christopher's Hospital for Children, a partnership between Tower Health and Drexel University, is a 188-bed facility that provides exceptional care to children throughout the Greater Philadelphia area and surrounding counties.
